Boss Acoustic Simulator

by Frogstomp89 » 09 Jan 2012, 08:18

Hi guys, sounds like a dumb question but I wanted to know.

If I ran this through a distortion pedal would it sound like an distorted acoustic electric?

I don't like acoustic bodies at all, I like the flat skinny ness of electric Kinda, I find the Acoustic Simulator sounds kinda like a real acoustic.

I've never tried my AC-2 before distortion but it sounds horrible after it.

That doesn't surprise me. The AC pedals are supposed to give you a realistic modelled acoustic sound. They would be expecting to start from a clean uneffected electric guitar signal.
The distortion should be fine after the sim pedal (may not sound great, but should sound more like the real thing).

I've also read that the AC pedals sound 'more realistic' if you plug them straight into a PA. Maybe this is more what Boss intended them for?

I'm not saying you shouldn't experiment by placing an AC pedal in different positions on you board - you may find an odd sound you like in an unexpected position.... but generally speaking you would expect that a simulator that is attempting to replicate a specific guitar tone would best be found at the very start of your effects chain (just like an actual guitar).

This doesn't answer your question but is a very keen trick with the AC-2.
