Non-BOSS pedal demos by Pepe (KORG TNB-1 Tone Booster)

by Pepe » 07 Jul 2014, 21:53

Phew! Those took a long time to finish! But finally I can present you the complete KORG ToneWorks series from the mid-90's.

You are allowed to skip the 411fx multi effects demo, but don't miss the 301dl demo! The 105od is also a nice sounding effect. A pretty good simulation of the 60's British amps. But, alas!, there is digital noise in the background all the time and you need a BOSS NS-2 to get rid of that. I really loved that sound all the years, but I sold it last week. If KORG ever comes up with a reissue without digital artifacts while tweaking the knobs and without the annoying tone in the background, I'd buy it on the spot.

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe

by Pepe » 13 Jul 2014, 06:30

That's the Hi-Fi/Lo-Fi filter set to almost complete "Lo-Fi" plus a good portion of High Damp. The more you move into Lo-Fi territory you get very analog and tape-like sounding repeats.

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe

by DarrinPA » 13 Jul 2014, 07:45

Cool, my ibanez Delay lowers the treble and distorts the signal a bit for darker repeats, but that sound you got is pretty cool. How much were they brand new?I looked on ebay for one but it's around $150, Yet I've found the dirt and overdrive going for less than $50...

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe

by Pepe » 13 Jul 2014, 12:11

One of my two mint and boxed 301dl's has the original price written on it: 449,- DM (~ 312 $). Back then that was a bit more than the price of a BOSS DD-5 (395,- DM in 1997) which was on the market at the same time.

If you are interested in getting one, I have a third one that's up for sale. A bit beat up and I had to replace a switch, but it works like new. Just Send me a PM!

The OCTA isn't really something I'd buy (good luck prying my HOG2 out of my cold dead hands), but it looks to be a good solid effect for a reasonable price.

Thank you! I didn't look it up before, but after I have finished and published my Guv'nor comparison video I browsed the internet and YouTube if anybody has something similar before. To my surprise it seems like I'm the first guy with a side by side shootout video.

And the old Guv'nor taught me that there are good tones hidden in the GV-2 which I never really liked too much. I still like the old Guv'nor's EQ a lot more, but the new model can produce some decent sounds in the settings shown in my video.

Dirk

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (SD Power Grid)

by Pepe » 09 Jun 2015, 17:19

Yeah, I especially liked the sound of the middle frequencies. The EQ is very effective and the thing has a HUGE amount of gain and a HUUUUUGE amount of headroom! That might be the loudest pedal that I've ever had.

Pepe

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (SD Power Grid)

by DarrinPA » 12 Jun 2015, 07:08

Your keyboard/organ playing is amazing! I also find that external processing of the rotating sound is usually the better choice. If I didn't already have my rotary simulator I'd definitely by that great little pedal. The Seymour Duncan pedal is very gritty, the others demos I've seen didn't have as much. Were you using the neck pickup? Maybe that's the difference. It's a very aggressive pedal no matter what. I'm sure it would sound great pushing my tube amp, it loves over-the-top gain and volume, and so do I.

I always make memos where I write down which pickup or pickup combination I used in which setting. As always (I have no other electric guitar) I used my MIJ Fender Stratocaster with three single coil pickups. For the Power Grid demo I mainly used the combination of the middle and the bridge pickup (no hum noise this way). At 1:28 min I used the neck pickup and at 1:49 min the bridge pickup.

My tube amp has a very clean sound and even after microphone recording this is pretty much how it sounds in reality.

The Power Grid is indeed very aggressive as you can hear in the example beginning at 1:28 min. There is no subtle distortion. Even at low gain settings the distortion suddenly kicks in and it stops abruptly when the input signal volume drops off. At higher gain settings you have a full blast distortion and the maximum setting is totally insane!

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (KORG DST-3 & FLG-1)

by Dirk » 16 Jun 2015, 19:03

Nice Pepe, I really like the flanger, it has a great chorussy sound. Really 80's, and the crazier sounds were cool as well, especially the sitar sound.
This would be a nice replacement for a BF-2.
With the distortion you can really tell it's a pedal, it sounds a little too gimmicky to my ears, although I do like the darker sound you got at the very end.

Dirk

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (KORG DST-3 & FLG-1)

by Pepe » 16 Jun 2015, 20:15

I simply LOVE to try out sitar-like sounds with flangers and delay pedals!

I think that the flanger doesn't have too much in common with the BF-2's sound. The BF-2 sounds smoother in my opinion. The FLG-1's modulation sounds a bit wobbly, which can be nice for crazier effect sounds (like the one at 2:10 min). The KFL-401 Flanger for the KORG PME-40 has a similar behaviour and I didn't like that too much. The BF-2 has a more symmetrical sounding up- and downwards movement. But maybe the KORG flangers' delay times are longer and that would explain the wobbly sound.

The DST-3 can quickly become a "bees in a jar"-distortion. I think it's sad that they didn't use two knobs for sound shaping to balance the highs an the lows. I like that pedal with low gain settings and it offers very dynamic playing like you can hear in the last example. Turning down the guitar's volume knob is also very effective. That's why I keep the Hard Dist. It is a very solid dirt pedal and I like the dynamic sound.

I didn't know you could do that, but my BF-2 does it as too, not as well as the FLG-1 but still, very cool.
You're probably right about the BF-2 sounding smoother, it also doesn't get as crazy.

Dirk

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (KORG DST-3 & FLG-1)

by Pepe » 17 Jun 2015, 20:20

The KORG flangers can self-oscillate like no other analog flanger I know. The modular unit KFL-401 also had negative feedback (also self-oscillating) which sounded quite interesting, too.

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (Seppuku Octave Synth

by Pepe » 30 Jun 2015, 21:57

The price of the Seppuku Octave Synth was 180 EUR and I can tell you that it is very rare and I was on the search for this one for a few years. My exemplar was possibly the last remaining new unit in the world. I found and bought it online at a Dutch music shop last Christmas. It was one of the most expensive pedals that I have bought, but I was GASing so hard for it and it turned out to be worth every cent of it. My kids love it as well. I will take it to the next jam session and I'm sure the audience will be surprised when they hear me play the bass through it.

Seppuku FX is a guy of the name Rhys Gillespie and he just moved from Australia to New Zealand. The ugly website is www.seppukufx.com and it often changes visually as well as his pedals. It is a one-man-brand and everything he does is pure craziness. The Seppuku Kompakt Kassette and the Memory Loss have become insiders' tips and if they pop up at Reverb.com or Craiglist they are quickly sold for good prices. If the prices of new models were lower, I had bought some pedals directly. Most Seppuku pedals don't contain too many electronic components and some of his circuits can be found in the internet. But I would never build a clone of pedals that Rhys makes again from time to time.

The demo contains guitar recordings with the FURY right after the guitar and then after a buffered pedal (it sounds different this way) plus bass recordings in the last minutes.

Pepe

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (Hotone FURY)

by Dirk » 04 Aug 2015, 10:24

I liked it better without the buffered pedal in front, the sound seemed more open.
And there was a serious low end boost with the bass, I didn't expect that...

Dirk

Re: Non-BOSS pedal demo videos by Pepe (Hotone FURY)

by Pepe » 04 Aug 2015, 11:13

It sounds great with bass, doesn't it? I was surprised as well.

And the buffered pedal in front of the FURY produces a funny nasal and farting sound that I deeply enjoyed while recording it. But yeah, I also like it directly after the guitar (or after true bypass pedals).

It is really a nice pedal, although the tempo changes can be very distracting if you try to keep a certain tempo.

A while ago my friend from Los Angeles asked Hirofumi Uchino, the builder of the Lastgasp Art Laboratories pedals, if he could do another small run of Ripplet tremolos. But he said he won't do it and that it was the dumbest pedal he has ever built. So there are only a few dozens of them out there and some people are willing to pay over 600$ for an exemplar.

I think a Ripplet 2.0 could be nice if it included three more knobs to control minimum speed, maximum speed and the tremolo waveform (triangle/square).
