That is actually the first guitar in your collection that I'm really impressed with.

What a lovely color, awesome!

Awesome paisley burst!

What kinda model is that!? Some funky FSR?

In the first picture it looks like a black finish reflecting the floor tiles ...

Nice axe!

Laurie - Sure is crazy! (Also, did you get my email?)

Arpeggiator - It's one of . I just loved it when I saw it, so stopped messing around and just got it bought.

Cheers dudes. I love it, and so happy I got it. Realised I've been playing my short scales too much, so getting used to it. Plays beautifully though. Set up really well.

natthu - Was actually going PM you a link before I got it, but I held off. I knew you had the Tele love. Also, I finally got a BBE Supa Charger after our discussions. Came the day before the Tele.

That is a lovely paisley. Nice and subtle. I've almost bought the pink MIJ version before but decided it was just a little too pink for my liking....
How does the FSR quality of yours feel compared to your other guitars?...
Should be pretty nice I expect (and you've got some other guitars which I would expect would play very nicely aswell)

The Supa Charger is an indespensible piece of kit for me. It's so lovely and quiet...
I run my HZD on either output 5 or 6 switched to 16V... gives it a little more "ooomph"....
The only limitation I've found is that you need to run any super-power hungry pedals on either 5 or 6 as they are the outputs with higher mA available.
I've found that only my El Cap and my POG2 both need the extra draw... everything else is fine on the lower outputs.

I've recently also bought a T-Rex Fuel Tank Junior for my smaller boards... you can't power anywhere near as much with it but it's nice and grunty for its size.

I'm sorry man, I never really liked the SG shape, and I never liked Stangs and jags to begin with.
I'm more into Les Pauls and tele's, that's why I really love this one, she looks great.

Epiphone SG bass - I tried one of those when I was looking to pick up bass, and liked the finish - not just the red, but the hardware and neck binding etc - better than the Squiers I thought. As a bass it's a bit too particular for my taste, though.

I like it because I'm really a guitarist and it had a nice slim neck. It was also within my price range at the time. Really, I want a Rickenbacker bass. Or one of them old Guilds. Maybe both?

Great collection Beef

One thing though - you have 13 guitars - that's unlucky - you need another

Mrs The_Doc would recognise this as #14 in my list of excuses when buying new guitars...others include...

7 ... it's only a guitar case, there's no guitar in it...
9 ... but it was Les Paul's birthday today....
21... I haven't got a yellow guitar...
25... it was an excellent deal for today only....

I actually have a couple more than 13.....
I'm currently playing the 'investment' card. The last seven or so guitars I've bough have either been limited editions, or from the 70's.

Ah...I'm glad you are beyond the unlucky 13 Beef - I was a bit concerned there for a second mate

"Investment potential / it's better than cash in the bank luv..." is #10 on my list I'm now formulating excuse #26 to handle a rather nice Tele that's crossed my path

Love the excuses.

My last purchase snuck in through the door with me when I came home from work a few weeks ago, 'missus still hasn't said anything yet, but I feel payback time is coming ..... it's nearly her birthday !!

Are you allowed to buy a new guitar for yourself for your wife's birthday ?? ..... what number is that excuse ??

Mrs_Doc has done very well on her birthdays due to my indiscretions in guitar stores - fingers crossed for you - hope it isn't too painful

I haven't used that as an excuse but she has a big birthday next year and it we have a special wedding anniversary too - you've given me much food for thought Sinom I feel the list of excuses is going to grow

I've got a Japanese bolt-on version from the early 70s - Sakai its got a real fast neck and a punchy sidewinder, its a cool bass
